(MTV News) "If you're wondering how to teach your daughters (and sons!) about the awesome women who have made a positive mark in our world, there's a new collection of paper dolls that celebrate badass women in history. These artsy paper dolls are totally not limited to children only, so if you want to celebrate Women's History Month by picking up your own copy there's no reason you shouldn't." (Romper.com) "Awesome Women Who Changed History: Paper Dolls allows your child to learn about incredible women who changed history while she plays with paper dolls (with which she can then decorate her room!)." (PopSugar) "While kids can learn about history, they can also make up their own stories. Oprah can meet Harriet Tubman, or go on a flying adventure with Amelia Earhart. And really, what better way to teach kids about women's history, than to put it in their own hands and let them bring it to life?"
